ün-, pref. Words with this prefix are arranged in five alphabetical lists, in the articles un-¹, un-², un-³, un-⁴, un-⁵. Any word given without definition of its meaning is sufficiently explained in the opening lines of the article in which it occurs. The less common words of obvious meaning are omitted except when it is desirable to show that the *un-*form is to be preferred to or exists as well as one in de-, dis-, in-, mis-, or non-. Many of the adjj. in un-⁴ ending in -able, -ed, -ing, are identical in form with the verbal adj., p.p., or part., respectively of verbs occurring in the earlier articles; e.g., an unbridled horse may be one that has had its bridle removed, or one that has never worn a bridle; to such words is attached the reference 'see also UN-¹ &c.'

un-4

Adjectives with their derivative nouns & adverbs; the sense of un- is either simply 'not' (as in most adj. in -ed, -ing, -able, & a few others, e.g. unofficial), or more commonly 'the reverse of', with implication of praise, blame, &c. (thus un-English means 'culpably opposed to English thought, habits, &c.'). There are occasionally pairs of adj. in un- & in-, e.g. immoral, immoral, of which immoral means 'contrary to moral law', & unmoral 'not concerned with moral law', but this distinction is not general.

in, as (round)pe; * = - or -; @ = I; R, UR, = R; J, J, = I, I; and see p. ix.

The sense of any adj. in un- not found below is that of the simple adj. preceded by 'not'. APPENDIX I

ABBREVIATIONS

Abbreviations are made chiefly in two ways. A. The beginning of the word is given, and at any point (after one letter, after all but one letter, or anywhere between) it is cut short with a full stop; so N. = North, Liv. = Livy, syn. = synonym: the full stop serves to announce that it is needless to go further with the word. (Sometimes, as in ENSA and SCAPA, the full stop is omitted between the letters.) B. Some portion of the middle of the word is dropped out, the first and last letters being retained with or without others between; so wt = weight, hrs = hours, exrx = executrix, Abp = Archbishop; the writing of a full stop at the end of these on the analogy of that in A, though now usual, is to be deprecated; it is not a natural device (as in A), but artificial; it has very rarely the merit of announcing that the letters printed are not a full word, since that is nearly always clear without it (caps for capitals is one of the few exceptions); and it has always the demerit of failing to let the reader know that in the riddle he is called upon to read the last as well as the first letter is given him. There is also a mixed class in which the full stop at the end does convey that the end of the word is missing, but without implying (as in A) that all the letters up to that point are present; such are eg. = c(ent)l(gram), cf. = c(on)f(er), avdp. = av(oir)d(u)p(ois); the first two of these consist of the initial letters of their words' etymological elements, the last gives the first letter followed by such of the consonants as may suggest the general sound.

The method adopted in the following list is to omit the otiose full stop in accordance with the view expressed above; it is, however, to be understood that all abbreviations here given without the full stop may also be, and more frequently are, used with it. The U.S. State names, and those of British counties, should be mentioned; in the former we give the full stop or omit it as explained above (Vt. Va., Ky, for Vermont, Virginia, Kentucky; Mass., O., Oreg., for Massachusetts, Ohio, Oregon); in the latter we write the full stop after the s (Yorka., Leics., Berks., &c.) as representing shire. Viz and oz are preferred to viz. and oz. on the ground that the z itself represents a written terminal flourish.

APPENDIX II

PRONUNCIATION OF NON-ENGLISH WORDS

The words in the following Appendix list are those containing sounds that (like the French nasals and the Scotch ch) are unEnglish and therefore not covered by our notation. In this appendix they are arranged in three lists: the words in their ordinary form; the anglicized pronunciation, denoted by the same symbols as those used throughout the dictionary, but with extra symbols to represent the unEnglish sounds; and the French pronunciation in the alphabet of the Société Phonétique Internationale.

CONSONANTS

In the anglicized pronunciation the new symbol to be noted is ch, which is used here to represent a soft guttural sound between sh and k, heard in Scotch words like loch and common in German.

In the International Phonetic alphabet the consonants have their usual values, except the following:

j	is the sound in Eng. young	ʒ	is the sound in Eng. vision
ʃ	" " Fr. digne	x	" " Scotch and Ger-
ʃ	" " Eng. shout		man loch .

VOWELS

The nasal vowels characteristic of French are pronounced 'through the nose', that is, with the soft palate at the back of the mouth lowered so that the sound of the voice is admitted to the nasal passages. The nasal vowels are four; and are approximately the nasalized forms of the vowels in English at, art, all, earl. In the anglicized pronunciation they are denoted by ān, ahn, awñ, ērñ, in the phonetic alphabet by ɛ̃ ɑ̃ ɔ̃ œ̃. These vowels are all heard in the phrase un bon vin blanc (œ̃ bɔ̃ vɛ̃ blɑ̃).

The vowels in the International Phonetic alphabet are as follows:

a	as in Fr. patte	o	as in Fr. note
ā	ban (= nasalized ah)	ɔ̃	bon (= nasalized aw)
ē	dé	ø	peu
ɛ̃	fait	œ̃	seul
ē	fin (= nasalized ā)	œ̃	brun (= nasalized ɔ̃r)
o	de (obscure)	u	tout
i	ni	y	pu
o	beau	ɥ	buis

• denotes that the preceding vowel is long.
